New York, NY – 212.915.5920

Amandip Singh focuses his practice on the defense of healthcare providers in complex medical malpractice litigation. Drawing on more than eight years of combined experience as a licensed New York attorney and certified physician assistant, Amandip brings a unique perspective on the intersection of law and medicine in developing effective defense strategies. Amandip's background, which includes extensive clinical experience in urgent care, family medicine, and hospital internal medicine, enables him to critically assess standards of care, causation, and liability. He is dedicated to delivering effective solutions through clear communication and responsiveness and is fluent in Hindi and Punjabi.

Before joining Wilson Elser, Amandip was a health care attorney at a New York nonprofit organization, representing clients in administrative hearings, insurance coverage disputes, and medical debt litigation. During law school, Amandip was a legal intern at a firm in Garden City, New York, where he gained valuable experience assisting in various phases of medical malpractice and personal injury litigation, including conducting legal research, motion practice, and the detailed review of medical records.
