Indianapolis, IN – 317.660.2376

Azza Ben-Moussa handles all phases of complex civil litigation, including discovery, expert development, dispositive motion practice, and trial preparation. She represents corporate clients in Indiana state and federal courts in matters involving product liability, catastrophic injury, employment, toxic tort, drug and medical device litigation, professional negligence, and commercial disputes. She practices in the U.S. District Courts for the Northern and Southern Districts of Indiana.

Before joining Wilson Elser, Azza practiced at a civil litigation defense firm in Indianapolis, first as a law clerk and then as an associate attorney.

Product Liability

Azza defends companies in product liability litigation in Indiana state and federal courts, managing matters through all phases of litigation, from case inception through discovery, expert development, and dispositive motion practice. She prepares corporate representatives for Rule 30(b)(6) depositions, helping clients present consistent positions on design, operational practices, and risk. She retains and prepares technical experts and drafts motions challenging the admissibility of opposing scientific and engineering evidence.

Drug, Medical Device & Toxic Tort

Azza represents clients in drug and medical device and toxic tort matters, where expert evidence often decides the outcome. She develops admissibility strategies and challenges technical and scientific testimony. She also performs exposure analyses that weigh legal, factual, and financial considerations to guide resolution strategy.

Employment & Labor

Azza defends employers in employment litigation in state and federal court. She advises clients on litigation risk and dispute resolution strategy. Her writing on workplace restrictive covenants has been published, including the co-authored article “FTC Proposal to Ban Noncompetes: What Employers Need to Know” in The Indiana Lawyer.
