Ben Greenfield is an experienced civil litigator specializing in premises liability and construction defense. He handles high-exposure cases in Pennsylvania and New York federal and state courts, from investigation and risk analysis through trial and appeals. Ben has significant appellate experience, regularly arguing before New York appellate divisions and achieving favorable outcomes, including some notable precedent-setting decisions. He also has achieved consistently excellent results as part of an accomplished trial team.

Ben defends prominent, well-known real estate investment trusts, sports venues, arenas, casinos, hotels, and medical facilities. He serves as lead oversight counsel for a high volume of general liability matters in Pennsylvania for the national casualty program of a leading global property and casualty insurer. His experience allows him to quickly identify potential issues, provide clients with case road maps, and offer crucial insights on coverage and risk transfer, consistently achieving early risk transfer. Ben works closely with clients to understand their operational needs and business interests to tailor case strategies accordingly.

Clients routinely consult Ben pre-litigation for investigation management and exposure mitigation, and for risk management advice to prevent litigation. He is mindful of clients' economic pressures and committed to efficient resolutions. Whether early settlement or trial is in the client's best interest, Ben is equipped to handle all aspects of litigation from start to finish.
