Breona Harrison represents clients in a broad range of complex litigation matters, with a focus on general liability, commercial litigation, premises liability, transportation liability, personal injury, and negligent security claims. She provides strategic, results-driven advocacy throughout all stages of litigation, from case assessment through trial.

Before joining Wilson Elser, Breona practiced at a firm focused on insurance defense, where she represented insurers and their insureds in litigation and administrative proceedings. During that time, she developed significant experience resolving high-exposure matters through negotiation and alternative dispute resolution. She is committed to understanding her clients' objectives and providing practical, strategic counsel tailored to their needs.

Beyond private practice, Breona is dedicated to serving her community through pro bono legal work. She remains actively involved in organizations focused on community service, health, and education and takes pride in using her legal knowledge and experience to serve others both inside and outside the courtroom.
