Brian Ramkissoon is an experienced litigator whose practice focuses on cybersecurity, data privacy, class action defense, and technology litigation. With more than a decade of litigation experience, he represents clients through all stages of a matter, from incident response and pre-suit strategy through discovery, dispositive motions, mediation, and trial preparation. He provides practical, business-minded counsel designed to manage risk and position clients for efficient resolution.

Cybersecurity & Data Privacy Litigation
Brian defends organizations in litigation arising from data security incidents, alleged privacy violations, and the collection, use, or disclosure of personal information. His experience includes data breach class actions, claims arising under state and federal privacy statutes, and related technology and commercial disputes. Brian works with clients, forensic consultants, and technical experts to understand the underlying incident, translate complex technical findings into effective legal strategies, and identify opportunities for early resolution.

Class Action Defense
Brian represents clients facing putative class actions involving cybersecurity, data privacy, and consumer protection claims. He assists clients in developing early defense strategies focused on threshold issues such as standing, injury, causation, statutory applicability, arbitration agreements, and class action waivers. Brian draws on his broader litigation experience to manage motion practice, discovery, expert issues, and settlement strategy while addressing the procedural and practical risks unique to class litigation.

Technology & Complex Litigation
Brian represents clients in complex commercial, insurance, and technology-related disputes. His broader litigation background includes high-exposure matters involving construction, product liability, maritime claims, premises liability, contractual disputes, and insurance coverage. He has argued dispositive motions and motions in limine, taken and defended depositions, managed expert discovery, and secured summary judgment on behalf of clients. This experience allows him to approach cybersecurity and privacy disputes with a practical understanding of litigation strategy, case management, and trial
