Daniel Park is a seasoned litigator defending companies, organizations, and individuals across Washington, Oregon, and Alaska. His practice concentrates on complex tort, personal injury, transportation and maritime, product liability, property damage, and a range of commercial disputes. Daniel excels at defending high-volume business litigation and developing strategies that improve efficiency, control legal costs, and highlight clients' strongest arguments to achieve favorable outcomes.

Daniel values a strategic and practical approach to litigation to help clients further their business priorities. When appropriate, Daniel has a reputation for being an aggressive, thorough, and exhaustive litigator.

Before joining Wilson Elser, Daniel was a partner in a regional Pacific Northwest law firm where he was a practice group leader for the firm's litigation group. He also was a partner at a boutique law firm focusing on admiralty and maritime litigation.

Complex Tort / General Casualty

In the area of complex tort and general casualty, Daniel has successfully litigated matters for clients related to personal injury, wrongful death, premises liability, construction injury, subrogation, and property damage.
