David Morrow handles a diverse range of matters on behalf of insurers, including coverage and extra-contractual litigation, coverage advice, and defense of insureds, with an emphasis in third-party liability, and first-party commercial and personal lines claims. Prior to working at Wilson Elser, David advised and litigated on behalf of insurers at both national and boutique law firms. During law school, he interned for his constitutional law professor and the Western Law Center for Disability Rights (now the Disability Rights Legal Center). While in college he interned for the California Attorney General's Office in San Francisco and the U.S. Marshal Service in Washington, DC.
