Grace Olubowale represents insurance carriers and their insureds in civil litigation, with a focus on general liability matters involving premises liability and personal injury claims, as well as matters involving companies in the gig economy and technology sectors. She evaluates liability and damages exposure, identifies potential risk-transfer opportunities, including tender and indemnification, and handles pleadings, motion practice, and written discovery in state and federal courts.

Before joining Wilson Elser, Grace practiced at a Towson, Maryland, law firm, where she handled a broad range of civil litigation, including employment disputes. She drafted pleadings, motions, and briefs and worked with senior attorneys to develop litigation strategies.

Grace began her legal career in trusts and estates at a Columbia, Maryland, law firm, where she drafted complex trust instruments and probate petitions and supervised law clerks and a paralegal.
