Justin Lipski represents businesses and individuals in civil litigation and complex corporate transactions. His practice focuses on the defense of claims related to toxic torts and product liability, as well as providing strategic counsel on corporate governance, business structuring, and intellectual property portfolios.

Toxic Tort

Justin focuses on defending manufacturers and suppliers in complex, multi-defendant asbestos- and silica-related litigation. He manages all phases of discovery and pretrial advocacy, including conducting depositions of plaintiffs and percipient witnesses, and develops evidence to refute product identification and exposure claims. Through these efforts, Justin has consistently secured dismissals and favorable resolutions for his clients.

Asset Protection & Risk Mitigation

Justin has extensive experience advising high-profile clients and businesses on the protection and structuring of professional assets. His work includes entity formation, business structuring, and sophisticated IP valuations for estate and tax planning purposes. He has executed complex IP valuations for high-profile athletes, achieving substantial tax savings and asset protection for heirs. Justin also negotiates high-value licensing deals and manages the registration and maintenance of trademark and copyright portfolios for diverse business entities. He is adept at aligning corporate governance and contract terms with clients' business objectives while mitigating risk through precise negotiation.
