Kendall Lee Cash is a civil litigator whose practice focuses on premises liability, product liability, medical malpractice, and appellate litigation. She represents businesses, property owners, manufacturers, health care providers, and other clients in complex civil matters in state and federal courts.

Kendall handles matters through all stages of litigation, including pre-suit investigation, written discovery, depositions, expert discovery, dispositive motions, mediation, trial preparation, and appeals. She approaches each matter with an emphasis on identifying key legal and factual issues early and developing focused strategies for efficient resolution.

Premises Liability

Kendall represents property owners and major retailers in premises liability matters at every stage of litigation, from pre-suit investigation through appeal. She has substantial trial experience in Alabama state courts and has obtained defense verdicts in premises liability cases before both judges and juries. She has also secured summary judgments for premises defendants and successfully defended those judgments on appeal.

Medical Malpractice

Kendall represents hospitals, physicians, and registered nurses in personal injury and wrongful death actions arising from allegations of medical negligence. She has experience handling complex medical malpractice matters involving disputed issues of standard of care, causation, and damages. Her trial experience in this area began early in her career, when she assisted in defending a six-week medical malpractice trial in Walker County, Alabama.

Product Liability

Kendall has defended product manufacturers in the food and health care industries in
