Robert A. Pagan is a trusted advocate in high-stakes litigation, known for delivering results in complex and high-profile matters. His practice focuses on complex tort and general liability defense, informed by an extensive litigation background developed through years of defending clients in white-collar criminal cases. Drawing on his experience, Robert skillfully defends clients across a wide range of civil litigation, including claims involving catastrophic injury, wrongful death, professional liability, premises liability, and related insurance coverage matters. He brings a proven track record in demanding litigation environments, effectively managing reputational risk, navigating multifaceted legal disputes, and crafting effective courtroom strategies.

Prior to joining Wilson Elser, Robert represented c-suite executives, entrepreneurs, public officials, businesses, and individuals in sensitive federal and state investigations and prosecutions involving health care fraud and compliance, securities fraud, political corruption, and other serious charges. Earlier in his career, Robert founded and helped lead a public relations firm specializing in digital crisis response and reputation management. This experience continues to inform his ability to counsel clients facing parallel legal and reputational threats.
