Boston, MA – 617.422.5347

Roy Bjorlin represents clients in state and federal court in complex litigation matters with high stakes at issue. He vigorously defends individuals and companies against claims involving catastrophic personal injuries. Roy counsels and defends employers against alleged violations of state and federal employment laws. He also handles matters involving alleged professional malpractice, construction accidents and defects, and product liability.

Roy develops strong client relationships, providing clear and concise analysis that leads to cost-effective and favorable resolutions. Earlier in his career, Roy's experience as a claims professional strengthened his understanding of the insurance industry, coverage issues and the need to be a reliable business partner with insurance companies. Roy began his legal career as an Assistant District Attorney for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, where he tried more than a dozen cases before juries. His experience as a state prosecutor provided him with a strong foundation for his capabilities as a trial attorney, a role he has engaged in and enjoyed for more than a decade.

Complex Tort & General Casualty

Roy defends complex tort and general liability matters often involving catastrophic personal injuries and significant economic damages. These actions typically address contractual indemnity claims with a focus on transferring risk or obtaining other insurance coverage for the client in order to reduce potential exposure.

Employment Practices Liability

Roy represents employers and individual managers before administrative agencies and in state and federal courts. He defends discrimination claims based on age, disability, race and gender, as well as harassment, retaliation and wrongful termination claims. He also defends claims brought pursuant to the wage-and-hour laws. In addition, he has advised clients on and litigated matters involving non-compete, non-solicitation and non-disclosure agreements.
